Conducting rounds of open-ended questions may be an important component of clinical interactions with depressed older people. The aim of this study was to determine whether conducting open-ended questions is a useful technique for older people with depression who have cognitive impairment, an issue which is under-researched. In a 4-month RCT for depression, 60 older people with depression and cognitive impairment were randomised into a 'closed' or 'open' group in which their clinicians conducted or did not conduct open-ended questions respectively. The main outcome measure was the presence of depressive symptoms during the RCT. No between-group differences were found for the primary outcome \(OR, 0.69; 95% CI, 0.4 to 1.2\), or in quality of life at baseline or at follow-up \(P=0.14\). However, responses from open-ended questions were more likely to convey something positive or negative about the treatment \(OR, 2.56; 95% CI, 1.10 to 5.88; P=0.03\). Furthermore, providers who conducted open-ended questions were more likely to perceive](#) a positive change in participants' depression (OR, 3.69; 95% CI, 1.26 to 10.88; P=0.02). Conducting open-ended questions is a useful technique for older people with depression and cognitive impairment. They appear to convey important information that clinicians who do not do so miss. Implications for clinical practice, management and further research are discussed. Before you ask, not tonight. I would make a list of all the reasons I needed to be back home by this time today, but I just don't think I can list any of them in a letter anymore. All I have to say is that I'm glad we have a good thing going between us. -Jordan Alright! Here it is! I'm never going to answer the same "question" twice. You might get different questions on every page. It's meant to be a fun read but I'm serious as hell in what I'm saying. Please don't be offended by my ideas and don't try to fight me. It's just me and I really want to fuck your brains out. It's just a natural instinct to me. I know you want it too, and I'm going to 1cdb36666d
